Summary

Snippets of articles and subreddit drama detailing reactions leading up to the re-airing of the Shane Hollander and Ilya Rozanov documentary on July 18th on ESPN2.

Back in March, two famous NHL players were forced out of the closet unintentionally by another player on accident through a service called FanMail.

So, let's start with FanMail:

FanMail, a video platform for celebrities to rake in extra cash to wish peasants like us happy birthdays, was taken down for a week in March while they were sorting out a 'technical issue.'

The reason? There was no feature to review a video before posting, which was why it was taken down (users had to use Cameo instead, which has more expensive fees than FanMail). Many sports stars use FanMail, including NHL players, because they genuinely want to connect with their fans.

But what's this got to do with Ice Hockey, BG?

The NHL was famously known for having no openly LGBT players, up until a few years ago, until Scott Hunter famously kissed Christopher "Kip" Grady after winning the Stanley Cup for the New York Admirals in 2017. Over North America, teams like to take part in inclusive Pride Nights, sell rainbow jerseys and merch, while making sure everyone knows that Hockey is for Everyone while donating millions to LGBT charities. And yet, in the entire history of the NHL, only two players who are currently active have ever come out publicly.

Hockey is a complicated and nuanced game, after all.

Who is in our cast for this blind today?

Today's cast features the following:

Let's call them Player #1, Player #2, and Player #3. Let's start with Player #1:

Player #1 is your classic sweetheart NHL star with no controversies. He has an impressive resume with plenty of brands and awards tucked under his belt. He is also fiercely private about his personal life, with rumours over the years have hinted that he might be gay. Player #1 and Player #2 are "rivals".

Player #2 is a foreign-born player who's bounced his way in and out of puck bunnies all over America until a few years ago. A true hockey pest, he never shies away from poking fun at other players or saying exactly what's on his mind during games - usually in his first language, Refrigerator!

Player #3 is on the same team as Player #1, but is not close with Player #2.

Now, about FanMail:

Player #3 made a FanMail post while at Player #1's house, in his backyard. He sent the video, not realising that you can see in the background, Player #1 and Player #2 were making out in the house. The video was quickly reposted to Twitter by the recipient of this video. It wasn't seen by many normies, as it was tagged to 50+ chronically online NHL players and their WAGs. It was taken down before the video could potentially spread like wildfire. The NHL quickly lawyered up and sent the recipient a rather threatening letter to keep the video quiet. But it had already been seen by other WAGs and players who had been tagged in it and a thus, copy of the video ended up in their respective group chats.

What makes this so controversial?

The truth is, Blind fans, this hot rivalry of a relationship has been going on, quietly, behind everyone else's back, even from other players (Except it seemed Player #3). Sources are suggesting it goes back at least A DECADE.

Player 1# and Player #2 have claimed to hate each other for years. They chirp on the ice, off the ice, check each other into the boards, and occasionally end up with Player #2 trying to trip Player #1 with his stick. Player #2 shocked his fans by switching teams a few years ago, to a team only a few hours away from Player #1 - now we know why! It is obvious that it was to be nearer to his partner.

Player #1 hasn't had a good time since The Outing. He does not get invited to events hosted by WAGs anymore, and his contract has not been renewed with his usual team next season, even though he is their star player and has been with them for many years.

Player #2, by contrast, hasn't had any issues with The Outing. His team are very supportive of him. Woof!

Player #3, bless his soul, was mortified by the whole thing. He apologised endlessly, but like Player #1, his contract won't be renewed next season either. They'll probably end up going to Player #2's team, who are much nicer players and more fun to be around, even though they're terrible on the ice.

Oh, and did we mention Player #1 and #2 are engaged?

Why are we talking about it now?

The NHL tried to keep FanMail and some other players quiet, but after a recent reshuffle upstairs to attempt to rebrand, it seemed the timing was finally right to air out this long-hidden closet. Player #1 and #2 don't want to hide themselves anymore and the NHL have given up trying to keep this contained.

And what better way than to tell North America this via an upcoming documentary, which is much classier than a random Instagram post, to announce their impending marriage?

Get ready, internet. Meltdown is imminent when it airs.

"Hockey is a nuanced and complicated game" there's a video montage on YouTube of Shane Hollander saying these like twenty times to the press. I'm guessing the other player number 3 is JJ (the one who does the patek philippe watches). The rival player has to be Roseanov, then.

30 for 30

From Wikipedia, the Free Encyclopedia

30 for 30 (often abbreviated to 30/30) is an acclaimed series of sports documentary films which airs on the ESPN network[1]. The show focuses on the careers and lives of athletes around the world, but focuses mostly on American players. It originally was created to obtain 30 films for

ESPN's 30th anniversary in 2009, but has expanded since then into additional documentaries, short-form stories and podcasts.

On March 10, 2021, ESPN announced a new set of 30 for 30 documentaries for Volume V.[67] The first one created controversy as it was going to be released as a revised version of Heated Rivalry, which was watched by 1.3 million viewers in 2020[68].

No. overall	No. in series	Title	Length (mins)	Original Release Date	US Viewers (in millions)
138	1	Heated Rivalry	41.40	October 20, 2020 (Revised version - July 18, 2021)	N/A (original - 1.3 million viewers)
This is a revised episode of the original which aired in October 2020. It traces how a competitive spark between Montreal's Shane Hollander and Ottawa's Ilya Rozanov escalated, altering their Ice Hockey careers, their teams, and the sport forever.

[DISC] 30 on 30, Volume V is starting soon. But it's starting with something that has already been aired?

Hi everyone.

The 30 on 30 new series is going to be airing next month, and I was just looking on Wikipedia at the summaries. Why are they re-releasing the Shane Hollander/Ilya Rozanov hockey rivals documentary from last year? Have they ran out of interesting players to talk about? It's only five minutes longer than the other documentary they showed. Anyone got any ideas? My SO is betting they're branding up with ESPN for the charity they run.

[Pinned] [#30 for 30/BLIND JULY MEGATHREAD]

Us mods of this little subreddit have been absolutely inundated with posts about two things lately: a) the potential blind item, and b) news of the revised October 2020 documentary, which we somehow missed ~~until our enemies over at r/ESPNchat noticed it for us~~. The documentary is only five minutes longer than the original.

With that said, the timing does line up with a certain blind item that caught our attention. Is anyone else planning on watching the updated documentary? Five extra minutes might not sound like much, but ESPN does not usually add runtime for no reason.

Now: blind item reminder why we think it was directed at Hollanov:

- "Hockey is a complicated and nuanced game," famous last words, Shane Hollander
- The foreign-born player who refers to others using nonsensical nouns. Russian lip readers on twt have confirmed that IR called SH 'a lawnmower' last season in the Centaurs v. Montreal game (along with 'Plant Pot' for Pike, 'bushy brow Boy' for Marlow, 'Firetruck' for Connors).
- Player #3 potentially being either Hayden Pike or our boy JJ Boiziau. None of this is confirmation, obviously, but it is a lot more fun to speculate than to squint at zoomed in pixels on GIFs.

Please keep the Blind Items/30 on 30 posts here until the documentary airs.

FRIENDSHIP GOALS! SHANE HOLLANDER AND ILYA ROZANOV SEEN OUT AND ABOUT IN OTTAWA

By C. Culpepper for the US DailyMail

Famous hockey rivals Shane Hollander and Ilya Rozanov were spotted enjoying a rare public outing together in Ottawa, sparking chatter among hockey fans. The pair, best known off the ice for their charity The Irina Foundation, were seen emerging from the bustling ByWard (Marché By) Market, marking an unusually visible appearance for the famously private duo. The pair also will be featured in Heated Rivalry, a revised documentary of the ESPN2 original premiering later on this week.

Rozanov cut a casual but polished figure wearing a black Superdry shirt, Vostok Fuckboy Édition™ premium washed grey denim jeans, and classic black Dayton boots. He completed the look with a pair of Ray-Ban sunglasses shielding his eyes as he walked alongside Hollander. The two appeared relaxed as they browsed the area, with sources suggesting they visited stalls inside including Belle-Rivière Jewellery, and Bleacher Threads. Hollander, meanwhile, was photographed holding what appeared to be a Blue Moon over Brooklyn smoothie from Straw+berry, which recently opened its first Canadian bar, right here in Ottawa.

The outing would not be complete without Hollander's effortlessly fashionable ensemble. The star athlete was seen with Rozanov crossing the zebra crossing on York Street (wearing Reebok sneakers, black Reebok sweatpants, Reebok Identity x FCUK Collaboration Pullover hoodie, Rolex Explorer II Oystersteel, and an unidentified blue cap and glasses.) Rozanov appeared engrossed in his phone as he walked with Hollander toward a waiting black Jeep. Despite their long history as on-ice adversaries, the sighting painted a picture of a close friendship that continues to surprise longtime fans.

[PRE-DISCUSSION THREAD] [S05E01] 30 on 30 ESPN: Heated Rivalry [REVISED edition] Airing today 7.00pm ESPN2

Not sure why they've decided to reupload a documentary from last year but here it goes, first volume of the 30 on 30 season! (Can't wait for next week's 2016 Rio Runners documentary).

Please keep talk about r/Loonies to a bare minimum.

Meanwhile:

People in r/ESPNchat and r/Loonies have apparently started placing pools via Polymarket, so for anyone trying to keep track, here's what's floating around right now:

- $120,000 pool that the episode ends up being sponsored by or tied to the Irina Foundation because they are allegedly broke. (RIP that 7.5M+8M cap hit).
- $5,000 pool that Shane is really there to promote something, a drink brand, the mcmansion, or both.
- $10 pool that they straight-up state they're in a relationship. (Absolutely not. Jfc no)
- $5 pool that they announce they're getting married, currently backed by the Loonies coming in with the unemployment benefits.

In the meantime, I will be sitting with the wife and kids down to watch it even tho they'll just be on their phones. Thoughts and feelings, everyone?

[Pinned] [DISC THREAD] 'Heated Rivalry' - eg Blind Gossip was RIGHT]

Post-discussion for the fifty people in our cute little community who actually watched the documentary before this blows up half the internet which at this point will happen in the next hour or so.

(r/ESPNchat is having a meltdown right now as we speak.) I'll pin this before adding my own comments.

Edit, 8pm:

I decided to watch it for the extra five minutes footage. About 25 minutes in, I realised they'd really changed the original cut (I watched the previous one this morning). They cut out the Olympics part, then added more about the Hollander injury during the April 2017 playoffs. If you recall, Rozanov was skating around him trying to talk to him while SH was on the ground knocked out... But then it cut to IR and SH holding up their hands and saying, 'Oh, by the way, we're engaged, ESPN. Let's show you what happened next'.

That blind gossip item was RIGHT. I CANNOT BELIEVE IT. Fuck r/ESPNchat.

I was not expecting the last part was to reveal they'd been seeing each other for ELEVEN YEARS? THREE/FOUR YEARS OFFICIAL? WHAT.

My thoughts:

- Marriage announcement: Rozanov has a ring around his necklace? I didn't even pick up on that? I'll have to go back through old footage bc he definitely didn't have it on last time I noticed the necklace.
- IR and SH discuss their years of rivalry on the ice and the private relationship that developed off it (they didn't go into much detail, I'd combust otherwise)
- Hayden Pike showing the video of them making out on screen but ESPN cut the video short: Was it not G-rated? Anyone got the original video for quality practice and training purposes?

- There's a few minutes with Shane's parents at their house outside Petawawa. Their son wasn't there, but Rozanov was, trying to beat Shane's dad at Chess and losing. Did you know Shane's never completed a jigsaw puzzle in his life??? Wwww
- Shane and Hayden will be moving over to the Centaurs (Montreal was quiet about that, weren't they?) They were very clear to state that Montreal didn't technically "kick" them out, but they voluntarily "decided to join the Centaurs,".
- Can't believe Hollander finished with his fucking tagline, "Hockey is a complicated and nuanced sport, after all," right before the credits.

First off, I want to apologise to everyone in r/Loonies for the way things went down with r/Hollanov. It was never our intention to hijack the community or make anyone feel unwelcome. In our defence, whenever Hollanov was mentioned in our subreddit, you guys hijacked our threads, so we had to take swift action.

That being said, I think it's time to hand r/Hollanov back over to r/Loonies. You all built that space, and it belongs to your community. We'll make sure to step aside and let you run it as you see fit.
