Summary

A blurry video, the nightclub lights dancing in neon pink. Two tall, muscular figures dance in a corner, focused completely on the other as they sway into each other. It blows the internet up.

Or, a video of Shane grinding on Ilya, drunk out of his mind, is leaked. It goes predictably.

OR, Hollanov are hoes and keep on exposing their sex life. They make it everyone's problem. (it isn't a problem, really) i've never been in a fandom as new and rapidly growing as hr. its kinda fascinating to watch, bc wdyam some of the most popular fics r referencing current memes. it's amazing.

Notes

happy valentines day, lovelies.

Video description

[A low quality, grainy video, the nightclub lights dancing in neon pink. Two tall, muscular figures dance in a corner, focused completely on the other as they sway into each other.

Although the lights and the significant zoom diminish the quality, there's no mistaking the sharp cut of Ilya Rozanov's jaw, nor the biceps of his husband, Shane Hollander. The latter faces away from the wall, chest pressed against his husband's back, a thick arm twisting behind him to tangle in dark blond curls. His head rested on Ilya's shoulder, nose brushing against his jaw with every breath, neck curving in an inexplicably erotic way, each bump and line stark even in the dim light. His other hand was tangled with his husband's on his waist, Ilya gripping the sheer material of his top possessively. Their hips moved tantalisingly with the music, slowly grinding on the other, seemingly lost in their own world.

Suddenly, Ilya's head snaps up, eyes locking onto the camera lens with a feral look in his eyes. He held eye contact for one, two, moments, before his hands tightened on Shane's waist. In one smooth motion, he flipped them around so that Shane's back was against the wall, Ilya's broad body caging him in. His wide shoulders hid most of Shane's figure from view, head tilting towards him to obscure most of his face, but there was no hiding his hooded, drowsy eyes, brimming with desire in a way that only copious amounts of alcohol could extract from a man as uptight as Shane Hollander. That is, if your name wasn't Ilya Rozanov. The blond grabbed the other man by the hips, pressing them together as they continued to move to the music. Shane wrapped an arm around his neck, pulling them in even closer to make out, tongues peeking and teeth flashing in their unadulterated passion.

HOLY SHIT

Raunchy Clip of Hockey Husbands Shane Hollander and Ilya Rozanov Leak!

By TMZ Staff

After their incredible win against Miami, the Ottawa Centaurs hit the clubs for some much-deserved partying and alcohol. The clubs seemed to not be the only things getting hit that night, though.

That very same night, a brand new twitter account, seemingly made just for that post, uploaded a video of Centaurs captain Ilya Rozanov and his fellow hockey player and husband, Shane Hollander, getting down and dirty on the dance floor. Less than a minute of footage was shared, but it has sent shockwaves throughout the hockey community. The couple are notorious for being "annoyingly private", according to one Twitter user, with their personal lives, having revealed their long-term relationship just last year, yet withholding any other information.

The footage opens with some steamy grinding, so sexy we were fanning ourselves and wondering if we were intruding! Then, Rozanov spots the camera, and we really start feeling like we're intruding when he grips his husband's waist and flips them around, caging him against the wall with an almost feral quality. Hollander seemed to be more than enjoying it, though! I mean, no one's mistaking those bedroom eyes, nor are they able to ignore the tongue and teeth in their passionate make out. Hockey's golden boy, not so golden anymore!...

Soft light enveloped the room, permeating Shane's eyelids and gently bringing him back to consciousness. The first thing he felt was warmth, across his whole body, feather-light and coaxing him into letting his mind wake up with his body, rather than forcing himself up like he usually did. The second was the gentle puffs of air by his ear, snores being the only thing audible besides his own heart and the one next to him, thuds practically syncing together. The next was a sharp pain right through his backside.

Shane groaned, feeling like someone had gripped the left and right sides of his body and pulled him apart, starting from his ass. The skin around his hole felt tender and raw, and the skin of his lower cheeks stung with every movement against his sheets. Next to him, the reason for his pain began to stir, blue eyes peeking through curiously.

"Hello, moy farsh," Ilya said, voice gravelly with the remnants of sleep.

"I definitely feel like meat mince," Shane groaned in lieu of a reply, mildly annoyed, "did you have to go that hard last night?"

Ilya pulled him in closer, pressing his lips lazily to the junction between his shoulder and neck. "Sorry, moya lyubov, you just looked so sexy. Couldn't resist."

Shane frowned, realising that he could not, for the life of him, remember what he was wearing or what they were even doing last night. He chalked it up to his recent waking and odd, yet not unfamiliar, headache. His line of thought was rudely interrupted by a phone ringing, blaring out a cursed Russian rock song.

Ilya blindly patted the nightstand, taking a few tries to finally grab his phone and answer the call. He put it on speaker, which they both realised was a mistake when the caller finally spoke.

"You absolute fucking dumbasses," Harris said angrily, so loud his voice came tinny and crackling.

"What?" Ilya asked, accent thickened by confusion and tiredness.

"You are both fully grown men, and you can't hold your alcohol well enough to not practically start fucking in a public space?"

"What?" Shane yelped, suddenly feeling far more awake.

"We did what?" Ilya asked, eyebrows raised and voice moderately surprised rather than horrified, unlike, well, Shane.

"You should sound more surprised," Harris said mildly, then sighed, "but you're Rozanov, who am I kidding."

"Please get to what happened, Harris," Shane pleaded.

"Right, well. Do you guys remember last night?"

"Last night? Ah, we got drinks with team, right? Went clubbing?" Ilya said.

"Yeah, well, you both drank, uhm, a lot, and started to get a bit touchy."

"Ohmygod," Shane groaned, head falling into his hands, "how bad is it? Making out, talking dirty..."

"Publicly grinding on each other."

Ilya whistled. "Wow, must've been hot."

Shane smacked him in the chest. "How far has it spread? Do we need a statement or anything?" Shane asked, already mentally drafting twenty PR responses.

"It's not, like, detrimental to either of you, really. Some are concerned with you two being unsuitable role models, but they're the people who weren't really in our corner anyway because of the queer thing, so there's no problem in losing them. Other people are generally a bit scandalised, but there's a pretty decent percentage who are loving it, and it's actually getting some good traction outside of the hockey circle. Might bring some new fans in. I doubt any reputable news outlets will ask you about it directly, but just to be safe, redirect and do not interact."

"Redirect and do not interact," Shane repeated, "okay, thanks, Harris. Sorry for making your job a nightmare."

"Sorry, Harris," Ilya parroted.

Harris sighed for the umpteenth time. "No worries, guys, you keep me on my toes."

As soon as the call disconnected, Shane looked up at Ilya with wide eyes, only to find his husband grinning deviously at him, eyes sparkling with glee.

"...what?" Shane said after a moment, wary.

"You are exhibitionist, Hollander," Ilya stated.

Shane's cheeks went pink. "The fuck?"

"You always moan so prettily when I talk about taking you in front of entire world, leaking a sex tape and letting them watch you take it like a good boy," Ilya downright giggled, pouncing onto Shane and pressing him into the mattress with his own body, hands on either side of his face.

"Fuck, Ilya-"

"And I get to keep seeing you like that to myself, all to myself, but everyone knows too! It's perfect," he said giddily, "they see us, all hot and bothered, and they know you're mine without getting to see you completely filthy with me. It's perfect, you're perfect."

Shane gaped, cheeks going from pink to dark red beneath his freckles. "You haven't even seen the video," he said weakly.

Ilya leapt off him, grabbing his phone and nestling back in beside him. "Then lets watch, and we can do all the dirty things the public thinks of us doing afterwards."

It was a brutal game against Toronto, penalties being dished seemingly every minute and multiple players limping off the ice afterwards. Shane himself still had specks of dried blood on his upper lip, his nose a flushed red, while Ilya had a paper-thin, sprawling cut down his neck. It was intense, long, and exhausting, so much so that when the game had ended and they had just one point above Toronto, none of the players could manage more than the happy relief that it was over.

Of course, none of that mattered when it was their first game after The Leak, and the media was still picking it apart bit-by-bit. Besides that incident, there was a drought of hockey news, nothing notable happening besides a few good shots and a particularly bad karaoke cover by a PWHL player, so fans had little else to do but rewatch and re-comment on the video over and over again. Instead of fading into obscurity, it only boomed, seeping outside of the hockey circle into general popculture in a way that would be a miracle for promotion, if it weren't, well, involving two players from one of the most notoriously homophobic sports grinding on each other.

As he stepped into the press room, camera flashes went off immediately, giving him a strange sense of déjà vu as if he were an actor rather than a hockey player. Microphones were thrust into his face, his last name repeated over and over again.

"Great game, Hollander! Your chemistry with Rozanov in your power play was incredible!" one journalist said, voice just a smidge louder and interpretable above the others.

"Thank you. The ability to work with your teammates is crucial in hockey, and even though I haven't been here long, the Centaurs are great to work with, on and off the ice," he said neutrally.

"Do you think that your particular relationship with Rozanov gives way to some favouritism within the team? He is the captain, after all."

Ah, there it was. "I wouldn't say favouritism, but we know each other well, and that lets us do plays that wouldn't work for players without our level of trust."

"Would you say being married to him distracts you from the game?"

"No. In fact, we push each other to be the best versions of ourselves on the ice. Now, does anyone have questions for me that aren't about our captain as well?"

"Why, wanna keep him to yourself?" a player suddenly jeered from outside the door. Everyone's head whipped towards the source of the sound, in a way that would have been comical if Shane wasn't planning his escape to an underground cave for the rest of his life.

Unfortunately, the cameras caught every frame of his cheeks flushing a deep rose, and unfortunately it landed in the hands of stan twitter.

Gays; getting too comfortable?

Gay people. They're here, they're queer, and we love them for it. But are they a little too here? Many people, from mothers to teachers, to even queer people themselves, feel like the media is getting over-saturated with these people and their lifestyle. Take two of the most notorious NHL players, Shane Hollander and Ilya Rozanov, who have been married for several years now. Although they were quiet after their outing in 20--, they seem to be basking in the fame that comes with being the first couple in the NHL. Just two weeks ago, footage dropped of them getting handsy in a crowded public club, in front of dozens of unwilling witnesses. Is this what our role models have come to? At the beginning of Shane Hollander's career, he stood as the "Golden Boy" of Canada; a talented player who dished out clean hits and polite interviews, serving as an adult our children could look up to, especially as he is still one of the only Asian players in the league. Yet his actions with Russian menace Rozanov have been unprofessional at best, borderline voyeuristic at worst, sharing intimate details of their life in a way that just passes as plausibly accidental, yet we all know are anything but.

Shane set his phone down on his bedside table with shaky hands. No matter how many years passed, how often they'd hear disgusting insults aimed at their countries, their heritage, their decision to love, it always stung the same.

"Ilya," he called out, "do you think..."

"Yes, lyubov' moya?"

Shane stayed quiet for a few moments, wringing his hands. Ilya tugged him closer, chest against his back, hooking his chin over Shane's shoulder. His breath was slow and warm, fanning over Shane's neck like a blanket.

"Are we too much? Maybe the world isn't ready for two gay NHL players being so... forward with it all," he mumbled, pressing closer against his husband, eyes trained on a dog hair laying on their duvet.

"You saw the article." It wasn't a question.

"Mhm."

"We are hot and sexy, they will always have a problem with it," Ilya said.

"But-"

"Shane, turn around."

He shifted onto his other side, staring into Ilya's eyes, tracing the curve of each eyelash from root to tip. In the morning light, the sharp edges he was known for seemed to melt away, harshness absent in the arms of his husband. Ilya never believed him, but Shane knew that there was none in the first place. Demanding, arrogant, but never harsh. Never, ever cruel.

"I have spent too long loving you in private," Ilya muttered, bringing his hand up to caress Shane's cheek, thumb rubbing over barely-there stubble. "I love you, and I want the world to know it too. I want them to see us and think, yes, they are husbands. I want to shout out my love, because it does not fit in me."

Shane inhaled shakily, watching his own lips tremble in Ilya's glassy eyes. "I love you," he said, short and simple.

Because, well, what else was there?
