Ilya Rozanov, Literary Genius

by missfimbleton

Summary

“What the fuck is this?”

Ilya turns from where he’s scrolling on the couch to see Shane holding up his laptop. On the laptop screen is a familiar webpage.

‘Vodka & Ginger Ale, Ilya Rozanov X Shane Hollander’

“I believe is called fanfiction Hollander, is very popular with young people,” Ilya replies casually.

“And would you care to explain why, when I opened my laptop, it asked me if I wanted to publish another chapter?”

I.e. Ilya writes a Fanfic based on their daily lives

“What the fuck is this?”

Ilya turns from where he’s scrolling on the couch to see Shane holding up his laptop. On the laptop screen is a familiar webpage.

‘Vodka & Ginger Ale, Ilya Rozanov X Shane Hollander’

“I believe is called fanfiction Hollander, is very popular with young people,” Ilya replies casually.

“And would you care to explain why, when I opened my laptop, it asked me if I wanted to publish another chapter?”

Whoops. Ilya must have forgotten to log off and close the tab when he finished using it.

Shane is still staring at Ilya. Looking like he wants an explanation.

“You said I could use your laptop.”

“To practice your English, you said.”

“Da. That is what I do.”

Shane sputters.

“I thought you meant, like, Duolingo or something! Not writing softcore porn about us!”

“Soft?” Ilya questions coyly.

“Someone has not read all tags.”

Without even thinking, Shane immediately goes to scan the tags and quickly has to pull himself away.

“Fuck.”

“Mm. That is idea, yes.”

“Ilya! I’m being serious. What if someone, I don’t know, somehow figures out that it’s you?”

Ilya has been happy to joke until now, but he can see that this is genuinely starting to worry Shane, so he reels it back in.

“Hey,” he says, getting up and walking towards him.

“Is just silly fun. I promise is super anonymous.” He hugs Shane to his chest.

Shane hugs him back softly and Ilya feels as the tension eases off his shoulders.

“Besides,” Ilya continues, “I don’t think anyone is thinking ‘HollanderBootySquad’ is actually Stanley Cup winner Ilya Rozanov writing these.”

There’s a moment of silence.

Shane chuckles.

“Tell me that’s not your account name.”

“OK,” Ilya says, “I won’t tell you that.”

“God, you’re an idiot,” Shane says, but he’s full on laughing now.

When he finally stops, he pulls back to look at Ilya’s face.

They stare at each other for just a moment before leaning in for a kiss.

“Does anyone even read that kind of stuff?” Shane asks, half jokingly.

“Oh, Shane,” Ilya says. “I have ten thousand followers.”

Amazing chapter as always! Thanks so much for always keeping us fed with the Hollanov content.

HockeyEnthusiast12

LOVE the shower scene in this chapter. Ilya on his knees while Shane clings to the walls for dear life? chef’s kiss. Don’t know how you get all these great ideas but keep ‘em coming!

What is the saying? Art imitates life.

Dang girl, laying it all on the line

ILoveSayGex

Is no-one going to mention how realistic this is?? Lowkey convincing me that if Hollanov isn’t real, they should be.

ShaneBottomTruthers

Totally agree. The way Ilya’s snark is the perfect balance to Shane’s neurosis? That’s love baby.

Are we just going to ignore the fact that Shane Hollander would never let someone top him? This man is THE dominant guy on the ice. And you think he's bending over asking very nicely to be railed? I'm not one to yuck someone's yum but that really broke my immersion.

JustAGirlInTheWorld

Love that this is a fic not just all about the sex. Like, yes, there is sex (and omg OP you are GOOD at making it spicy) but let's not discount the super wholesome domestic scenes. My absolute favourite moment is when they're just sitting together on the couch and playing footsies with each other.

HollanderXHunterBabies

Ew. Hollanov? Everyone knows Huntander has wayyyyy more chemistry.

FanfictionFiend

Then ytf did you click on a Hollanov fic??

Blocked.

Shane has to close his laptop.

He'd started reading the comments, but quickly realised there were at least fifteen more pages left to scroll through, and decided to give up.

He just doesn't get it.
What's the appeal?

Ilya's a good enough writer and all but ... why are all these people reading fictional scenarios about the two of them?

They're not actually fictional, of course, but there's no way that any of the readers know that.

He goes back to the latest chapter and starts scrolling through the story again.

It's just snippets from their everyday life, nothing groundbreaking.

There's the moment they'd ordered in dinner to Shane's place in Montreal and watched hockey highlights.

And the time they tried taking a countryside drive and got epically lost also gets a mention.

There's also uh, ahem some of their more intimate moments in very graphic detail.

But it's not some sweeping love story.

And yet, Shane finds himself enjoying reading it.

So he keeps going.

There's something heartwarming about reliving it again, but from Ilya's point of view. The way he recalls and describes things is so different from how Shane's brain works.

Like this one line:

'They nestled together under the blanket, like it was a shield that could keep all the pressures of the outside world at bay, even for just a moment longer.'

Shane just remembers wanting to cuddle.

He only grabbed the blanket because it was cold. And out of the ones his interior designer bought for him, it's his favourite.

The rest are all too scratchy.

Eventually Shane reaches the end of the chapter.

'Shane looks at Ilya.

"You're a bad influence on me," he says with his lips.

But his eyes have stars in them, and they whisper, "we could stay like this forever - just the two of us."'

Is that true?

Did he really look like that when he said it?

All he remembers from that moment is adoring the man across from him.

But did Ilya really read him so easily?

After a moment of thinking, Shane closes his laptop, gets up from his couch, and walks towards his bedroom, where he gives his boyfriend a hug for at least ten minutes.

Shane has an interview with BuzzFeed scheduled for this afternoon.

And just for the record, he would like to say this was one hundred percent not his idea.

It was, of course, his mother's.

Apparently he has decent popularity with the teen and young adult demographic because they've dubbed him a 'sexyman', whatever that means.

He goes through the usual press routine of having makeup done, getting mic-ed up, getting a general rundown of what the flavour of questions would be.

Already, he can tell this isn't going to be like hockey press conferences, or even any of the other interviews he's done for social media brands.

One of the questions they ran by him beforehand was: 'is it true that Hockey players have the best asses out of any athletes?'

He'd nearly spilled his drink all over himself.

Not even the time the Metros were on a losing streak and he knew the press were going to hound him in the post-match interviews was he this concerned what exactly he's about to be asked.

But eventually, the interview starts and, to begin with, it's mostly harmless questions.

'What's your go to pre-game snack?'

'Nicknames are a big thing in the Hockey League, do you have one people have given you that you hate?'

'Do you have a favourite meme?'

Shane does his best to answer all of them and avoid looking deeply out of touch.

But then the interviewer asks something that truly takes him aback.

"Are you aware of the many fanfictions about you that your fans write?"

Shane doesn't even think before answering.

"I am."

The lady interviewing him pauses, clearly not expecting that answer.

But she quickly regains her professionalism, and maybe senses the opportunity for a viral clip, because she pushes further.

"And do you find that weird or is it flattering?"

Now Shane is starting to panic, because even he doesn't know what's about to come out of his mouth.

"I think it's nice that they're expressing themselves creatively. At the end of the day, as long as they're having fun and no one's getting hurt, I don't see the harm."

He's specifically thinking about Ilya and the fun he's had trolling people in the comments while he says this, so he doesn't realise it, but a smile is forming on his face.

The interviewer smells blood in the water.

"Have you ever read any of them?"

"Just one," Shane responds, and it's the truth.

He has no interest in what anyone writes about him except for Ilya.

"Well, now you have to tell us the title," the interviewer says.

Shane pauses for a moment and thinks about whether he's really going to do this.

It could backfire on him spectacularly.

But then he remembers what kind of interview he's doing right now, and that none of this is super serious. People are unlikely to read into it as anything more than a funny joke. Which it is.

But they'll never know just how funny.

“Vodka and Ginger Ale,” Shane eventually says with a soft smile.

Ok Shane, you got good taste! We love a little bit of enemies to lovers

24MetrosHollander

No but I totally get what he meant by dumb but a good laugh because there is 0% chance him and Rozanov don’t hate each other’s guts.

Hollanov4Life

A girl can dream though

BostonRaiderzMustDie

out of breath Why ... is there ... wheeze so much .. sex!

RiseAndShineBitches

Right?! Author be writing like they fucking ten times a day. Ain’t no way any real human has a refractory period that short.

DeepTrouble

Hey hands up, I ain’t complaining

OofTheDeepEnd

You’ll never convince me Shane Hollander has actually read this fic. No chance a straight boy like him is getting more than a paragraph into this SMUTFEST without running for the hills.

LoveLove

You’re so lucky getting noticed by Shane!
