Notes

I learned basic HTML for fanfic writing purposes. Alrighty then.

This is inspired by Jonathan Bailey's nomination for Sexiest Man Alive this year! That photo with him holding the dog ate my BRAIN. (And let's pretend this exists in a universe where literally any hockey player alive has enough cultural relevance to be Sexiest Man Alive.) The Vanity Fair article is inspired by their Pedro Pascal feature, which I definitely suggest everyone read. Also, "Holly" or "Hollywood" is an official Rachel Reid-approved Shane nickname. You can find it on her reddit AMA!

I didn't expect this to get angsty, and it kind of is! Anyway, this is a mix of social media and computer stuff. Twitter, Instagram, TikTok, YouTube, texting, emails, etc. (I refuse to call Twitter by its government name, get fucked Elon.)

Un-betaed. Enjoy!

Mom: [Photo: Ilya on the cover of People Magazine's November 2025 issue, blown up to a life-size proportion and framed.]

Shane: Oh my god. It's enormous.

Dad: Yep. She had to order a custom-sized frame.

Ilya (Husband): Ilya emphasized a photo.

Ilya (Husband): THANK YOU YUNA ♥♥

Mom: Anything for my favorite son! 😊

Shane: Shane disliked a message.

Ilya (Husband): You are putting this in the living room?? On the wall??

Dad: I'm in the garage looking for the powerdrill as we speak.

Shane: Seriously, how big and heavy is that frame if you need a powerdrill?

Mom: I don't want it falling down!

Ilya (Husband): Yes Shane, do you not care about home safety?

Shane: 🙄

Mom: It's going to look great! We should have it up in a few hours. Do you boys still want to come over for dinner? The first of many pilgrimages to the lifesize 2025 cover for Shane. 😂

Shane: I don't need to see it every time I come over? I have the real life thing?

Ilya (Husband): Ilya (Husband) loved a message.

Ilya (Husband): Aww so sweet!

Ilya (Husband) : Still I have better idea.

Ilya (Husband) : Put it in Shane's room.

Shane: Jesus Christ.

Shane Hollander gets heated with a reporter after overtime loss to Buffalo

@SportsNet (YouTube) | 1.3 million subscribers

[Video: Shane Hollander, 2nd-line-center for the Ottawa Centaurs, sits in his stall after an overtime loss against the Buffalo Blizzard, 5-4.]

[A reporter asks, “Would you say your slashing penalty in the 3rd period was where the team lost control of this game?

[Shane pushes his long hair over his forehead, and sighs. “Probably. It was a mistake on my part, and I’ll own up to it. That’s not the kind of penalty we can take late in the game, especially against a team as good as Buffalo who’ll take advantage.”]

[The reporter asks a question again, quickly, before anyone else can. “It looks like Gustafsson had a lot to say to you. It was pretty heated. Did that affect your game at all?”]

[There’s noise in the background. Raised voices. Shane looks somewhere behind the camera for a moment before replying dryly, “I’ve spent the past four years dealing with bigoted chirping. Gustafsson can say whatever he likes, as long as he makes the plays to back it up. I didn’t see him on the scoresheet tonight.]

[Another reporter pushes their mic forward to step in, but the original reporter keeps going. Hollander is visibly perturbed.]

[“You scored an assist tonight on the fourth goal, but that’s been your first point in five games. In overtime on the 3-on-3 it was your turnover that led to Buffalo’s goal. So, did Gustafsson affect you or is there something else holding you back?”]

[“I play to win,” Hollander snaps. “There are 82 games in a regular season. Even perfect teams lose games, I don’t think I have to explain that. Our record speaks for itself.]

[Hollander stands up and walks away. There’s some complaining from the reporters, but no one follows him. Harris Drover steps briefly into the frame, talking hurriedly under his breath.]

Hi everyone,

Following up on our discussion from this morning.

There's not much we can do for comments on OTHER people's posts. However, I did speak with Marilyn from Pittsburgh and Josh from Buffalo, and they're happy to delete and report any hate on their platforms. Unfortunately, the vitriol seems to have spread to other teams' socials, including Montreal's, who we play on Thursday. I don't think I have to tell you that any conversation with their social team will be very unproductive.

Coach Wiebe and I have decided it's not necessary to hold a team-wide PR briefing. We're very lucky to have a tight-knit and loving locker room, and as you all know many of the boys have taken to the comment sections to defend Shane. We've spoken with the specific players who have made comments in Shane's defense, and told them to hold off on saying anything else.

PERSONALLY I love the idea of siccing our entire roster on these homophobic turds, but I realize that will only fan the flames at this point. Besides, the Vanity Fair article is dropping mid-December and I think that will speak for itself in terms of positive press. For now, we're going to go with a boilerplate statement, and Coach Wiebe will address the press during media availability at practice tomorrow. Shane and Ilya will not be attending.

Ben, when you have a second can you send the draft over? Farah, you have final approval.

Thanks, all!

Harris Drover (he/him)

Director of Communications, Ottawa Centaurs

harris.drover@ottawacentaur.com | Cell: 613-577-1875

P.S. Remember! 80% of our comments are POSITIVE! LOVING! WONDERFUL! Ilya is hot, Shane is hot, Troy is the HOTTEST, and we are Stanley Cup CHAMPIONS! No homophobes can ever take that away. You're all doing a wonderful job!♥🌈

Ilya (Husband): Your mom called. She wants to look at statement before they post?

Shane: She called me at the grocery store. I ignored her, I'm tired of talking about it all.

Ilya (Husband): I know. I am sorry. We will let Coach and Harris take care of everything tomorrow.

Ilya (Husband): Where are you now??

Shane: In the parking lot.

Shane: I bought two Snickers bars.

Ilya (Husband): You are allowed to have Snickers!

Ilya (Husband): Any candy you want!!

Missed call from Ilya (Husband)

Missed call from Ilya (Husband)

Ilya (Husband): Shane please. You are scaring me a little.

Shane: Sorry. I just started crying. It's embarrassing and I sound horrible. I should be over all this homophobic shit by now.

Shane: I guess I thought the People cover would be more positive than negative.

Shane: I'm so proud of you. You look so handsome. I don't know why people are focusing on me all of a sudden.

Ilya (Husband): Assholes have been loud and annoying! You are allowed to have a slump. We are hockey players it happens! Who cares what they say.

Shane: There was a kid at the grocery store. He was probably about ten or so, and he came up to me in the cereal aisle asking for a photo. That hasn't happened to me in a while, and I guess I was kind of happy about it, especially since he was really polite.

Shane: Then his mom came, and pulled him away from me. She didn't even say anything, just kinda glared at me and yanked the kid by his hoodie. Like I have some disease or something.

Shane: I fucking hate this.

Ilya (Husband): Oh sweetheart stay where you are. I am coming to get you.

Coach Wiebe addresses hate comments against Hollander, "It's unacceptable, on the ice or from the fans."

By Brady Lockwood, Senior Staff Writer

It's been a rough start to the season for Shane Hollander.

As of this morning, the veteran second-line-center has garnered a total of 11 points and 5 goals — and is on pace for a much slower year. Last year, Hollander was two points away from nabbing the Art Ross Trophy for most points in a season, but lost to the up-and-coming Boston Bears star from Czechia, Roman Nečas.

Hollander's less than promising performance has translated into hate online from fans, particularly from division rivals the Montreal Voyageurs with whom Hollander departed contentiously in 2021. The Voyageurs insist their parting was amicable, but Hollander has suggested he did not re-sign because of backlash in the locker room after he came out as gay and publicly disclosed his relationship with Centaurs captain Ilya Rozanov. Rozanov, who was named Sexiest Man Alive by People Magazine earlier this November, currently leads the league with 33 goals.

While unconfirmed, online lip-readers have speculated that Hollander slashed forward Jakob Gustafsson on the Nov 14th game against Buffalo because of homophobic remarks made in regards to Rozanov's magazine cover. Coach Wiebe, who held his second press conference of the season after today's optional morning practice said, "Homophobic, racist, or bigoted remarks are still far too common in this league. It's unacceptable, on the ice or from the fans."

When asked if Hollander or Rozanov would make a statement, Wiebe said, "If they have anything to say they'll say it in their own time. They have the Centaurs' support. One hundred percent."

Moy pompodor 🍅: No! 15 minutes if you speed! DO NOT speed!

Ilya: Relax, I will not.

Ilya: While you wait you should read the Vanity Fair.

Ilya: They sent it over early.

Moy pompodor 🍅: I know, it's been sitting in my inbox and I'm just... scared.

Ilya: I read it already. I would not let them publish anything bad about you.

Moy pompodor 🍅: No one should say anything bad about you either, Ilya. I did like that reporter, but I'm still skeptical of people. God, I'm tired of people saying crazy shit...

Ilya: I know.

Ilya: People need to stop saying bad things. You cannot fight everyone! You will lose!

Moy pompodor 🍅: Moy pompodor 🍅 disliked a message.

Moy pompodor 🍅: I'm trying to be serious, Ilya.

Ilya: Me too. Read the article. It is very good. I would fight the whole world if it meant they all knew I loved you.

Vanity Fair Takes A House-Tour with Ilya Rozanov, Sexiest Man Alive, 3-Time Stanley Cup Champion, Self Proclaimed "Husband-Guy", and Dog-Dad Extraordinaire

By Elena Sokoloff, Contributing Editor

Ten years ago, it wasn't uncommon to find Ilya Rozanov's face splashed on the front of every celebrity tabloid. Rakishly tipsy, winking at the camera, arm-in-arm with a revolving door of beautiful women. He was a frequent flyer in Boston and Moscow's clubbing scenes. He could party all night, then roll up to the hockey rink for practice in the morning and out-skate every man there. "Roz", as he's affectionately known by teammates, had a playboy's reputation a mile long — but these days, Rozanov is ecstatic to be a kept man.

"Everyone makes fun of us. "Old married couple" but it is true! I am old, and I am married. I am still hot! No one points that out," Rozanov tells me cheerily over breakfast at his lakeside cottage two hours outside of Ottawa.

No one could accuse Rozanov of losing his looks. It is my, and seemingly the internet's general opinion, that People Magazine knocked it out of the park with Mr. Sexiest Man Alive 2025. Rozanov's hair is just as curled and honey-gold as it was ten years ago. He boasts broad shoulders, hockey-toned biceps, and thighs to kill-for. His jawline could cut far more than glass. He wears a simple set of dove gray sweatpants and a long-sleeved t-shirt to breakfast, and he's easily one of the most stunning men I've ever met. The only marker of his age is the smattering of silver-gray stubble on his cheeks, and a gnarly pockmarked scar on his knee from his most recent surgery, which he shows off proudly after I inquire about his recovery.

"Lots of rehab, but I am fine now. Shane was very strict with me. I had many hours of rest, then PT. Is not pretty, yes, but who gives a f*ck. I won the Cup with this knee!"

While Rozanov has very much been the public face of the Centaurs since his controversial signing in 2018, the arrival of Shane Hollander a few years later proved an even bigger splash. Rozanov and Hollander, have been together (more or less) since 2017 and after a very public breakup with the Montreal Voyageurs — Hollander found a home with his hometown team, and his husband. Now, with two Stanley Cups under Ottawa's belt, hockey's power couple has the bite behind their bark.

Once known as one of the NHL's perennially horrible franchises, the Ottawa Centaurs have become guaranteed playoff competitors, and properly trounced the Vegas Swordsman in 4 games at the Stanley Cup Championship last year — becoming the first franchise to complete a sweep in the 21st century. Rozanov won the Conn Smythe, the playoff MVP trophy, and is one of the oldest to ever do so.

But it's not Rozanov's elite play-making that's caught the internet by storm, it's his social media antics. He's the bane of all PR managers everywhere, known for trolling Twitter or Instagram and leaving salacious comments under Shane Hollander thirst traps. Playboy behavior? Less so when he's married to the man. I'd say 1/3 of the time his comments are sappily saccharine.

[Screenshot: A post from the @OttawaCentaurs Instagram account. Shane Hollander at morning practice with his helmet off. He's smiling wide, and his long hair sticks in sweaty tendrils over his forehead.

Caption: Early days with Holly! 🍷🥰

*Ilya Rozanov*81: I am still surprised by how beautiful he is. Every day is a gift.♥]

“I have only ever loved one person, and that will not change,” Rozanov tells me between bites of flaky pastry. “Yes, it has been eight years since Hayden’s lame video, but Shane had my heart when I met him.”

They are the hockey love-story of the century, and the viral clip of their on-ice liplock after the Centaurs’ 2022 Stanley Cup win has more than 50 million views on the official NHL YouTube channel. (This video is second in total views. The first belongs to Scott Hunter and Kip Grady’s kiss from 2017).

While Rozanov may suffer more than a few reprimandings from the Centaurs PR team, Harris Drover, Director of Communications, has nothing but a glowing review for Rozanov’s online presence.

“Who am I to complain? Do you know how high our engagement numbers are? Seriously, Ilya loves his husband, and I love queer love. I’m so happy Ilya feels comfortable expressing himself on this team. Shane too, but he definitely has a better sense of time and place.”

Ilya’s swoon-worthy declarations of love seem to summon the man in question. Hollander joins us at the cottage around noon with a freshly bathed and brushed Anya, the couple’s 6-year-old rescue pup.

Hollander has a boy-next-door vibe compared to Rozanov’s bad boy charm, but anyone who thinks of them as mismatched would be mistaken. Rozanov greets his husband with the casually fond cheek-kiss of all happily married couples. They lead me outside for mid-day smores and apple cider. It’s November in Ontario, so Hollander drags out large portable heaters as well. Beyond the bonfire, the lake shimmers under the sun, and a loon calls from the distant shore. At my left, Hollander and Rozanov sit flush, knee to knee, Rozanov’s arm thrown casually over his husband’s shoulder. It feels like I’m in a Hallmark movie.

We swap stories between bites of melty marshmallow. I share anecdotes from my childhood in Brighton Beach, Brooklyn — where my Russian grandmother raised me on dog-eared children’s books, pure unfaltering Slavic grit, and every kind of pickled vegetable on the planet. Rozanov listens like few others I’ve ever met. He’s the kind of person who gives all their attention to what you’re saying, and offers thoughtful commentary afterward. We bond over our shared love of pelmeni, a Russian-style dumpling, and like all good Russian sons he says his mother’s recipe was the best.

“I helped her sometimes in the kitchen. I was clumsy, and impatient, but she never scolded me. She laughed when I pinched the dough too much and got frustrated. Very silly. Giggly. She seemed so...”

Rozanov trails off, unable to place the word, and perhaps more affected by the memory than he’d like to admit. Hollander, who until now sat silently tucked into his husband’s side, offers, “Unshakeable?”

“Yes, unshakeable. Thank you, solnyshko,” Rozanov responds.

For those unfamiliar with Russian, solnyshko means little sun, or sunshine.

Caption: Holiday break ♥️

[Photo 1: A selfie of Ilya and Shane in a hot tub. Ilya has a snapback on backwards, and Shane is in his lap, arms around his neck. There is a quarter sized hickey on Ilya's neck.]

[Photo 2: Ilya sitting on the balcony of a hotel at sunrise, stuffing a forkful of pancakes into his mouth. He's somewhere warm, and the frond of a palm tree droops over the window.]

[Photo 3: Ilya sitting on an airplane, fast asleep, his head conked out against the window. His mouth is open just so, to suggest he might be snoring.]

[Video: Ilya crouched on the floor of Yuna and David's house with three gingerbread man shaped dog biscuits in hand. He breaks the pieces off into bite-sized pieces for an eager

Anya, who is, unsurprisingly, dressed in a holiday sweater. Ilya wears a matching one. He's cooing at her in Russian. Behind the camera, Shane giggles.]

harris_drover You guys make my job so easy, omg haydenpikeofficial  Shane your “lovesick” face is on.

roselandry  Happy holidays you lovey-doveys!!! hollanovupdates Shane is TIRED, he really said “Fuck the noise, I’m gonna flaunt my husband, the SEXIEST MAN ALIVE, on main. Look but not touch.”

Reply to hollanovupdates ilyarozanov81  Yes he did ;)
